

The real goals of DSRIP mean a transformed future system

- We need a future system where we think more broadly, on a community basis, where all of the systems that impact an individual's well being are coordinated.
- We could measure the outcomes that society cares about, moving beyond health care metrics

✓ Kindergarten
Readiness

✓ Quality of Life

✓ Community
Happiness

✓ Mortality

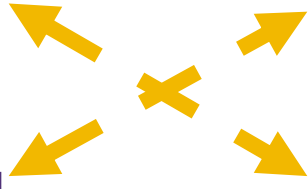

Cross-System Collaboration

Multiple systems effect the same individuals: Health care, education, housing...

We can no longer operate in siloes- we must coordinate efforts

Creating positive outcomes for individuals requires these systems to collaborate

New York State Medicaid and The Albany Promise work is based on this premise

The Future State

- Through this partnership, New York Medicaid is crossing the Rubicon by committing to meet a metric in a separate system: increasing kindergarten readiness.
- The health care delivery system and education system in New York will always be linked – cross-system collaboration is essential to improving children’s health and education outcomes.
- Successful collaboration will provide tremendous benefit to children, parents, and communities.
